Summary of the previous lesson

- globalisation as an outcome of the transformation process induced by modernity in its opened by industrialisation, when the means and techniques induced by it have projected times, spaces and relations of social life beyond the traditional boundaries of society, the physical ones of a city or state and the symbolic ones delineated by administrative borders
- the world is compressed into unified spaces, times and relations with a consciousness of the unity of the world where the system of differences, that society is, is sometimes seen as an added value, sometimes neutralised or even repressed, turning differences into inequalities
- positive and negative aspects of the gender implication of globalisation are intertwined and in too many cases used by politics to simplify complexity and by power to reserve access to or possession of resources fundamental to society for only a few, while globalisation is dependent upon women's unpaid reproductive work and gender wage inequality

Part Two

Forms of gender discrimination and violence in globalisation processes

The optimistic school (but with some reserves)

The integration of national economies with global economy will improve the situation of all citizens, including women

The critical school

Globalization will further increase existing inequalities and will lead to new ones

Globalization as disempowering of women

The strategic function of the "globalized woman" within the broader project of globalization is the execution of unpaid and underpaid labour

the 'globalized women' is the voluntary worker who helps to absorb the shocks of social cutbacks and structural adjustment

Ecofeminism

The feminist critique of the capitalism-patriarchy nexus: its distinctiveness lies in the inclusion of nature in the category of the exploited

The exploitation of nature is intimately linked to western attitude and male domination toward women and other vulnerable groups

Vandana Shiva in this TEDex (2010)

Vandana Shiva is a philosopher, environmental activist, eco-feminist and author of several books. Dr Shiva, is author of over 300 papers in leading scientific and technical journals and participated in the nonviolent Chipko movement during the 1970s.

The movement, some of whose main participants were women, adopted the approach of forming human circles around trees to prevent their felling. She is one of the leaders of the International Forum on Globalization

The Gender Inequality Index (GII)

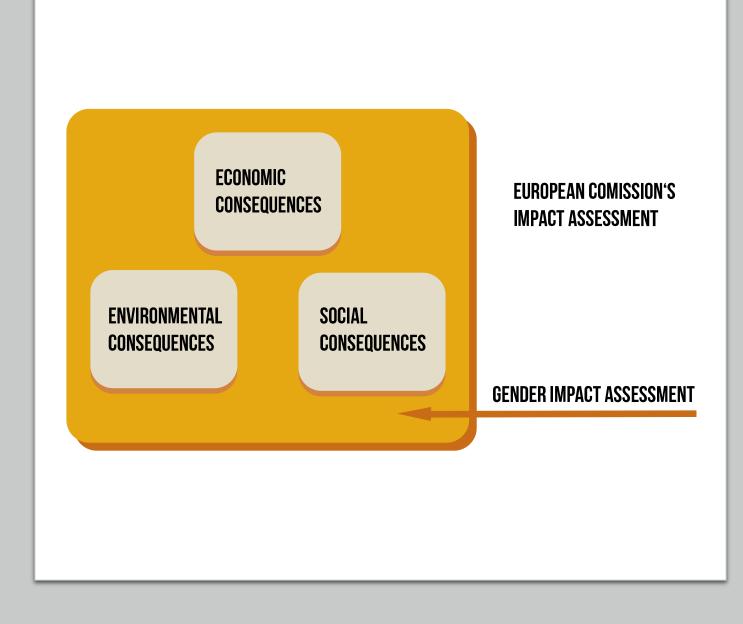

- Among the dimensions and phenomena it measures, are there any you would reme What other dimensions, if any, would you add?

Monitoring the gender impact of change

At the policy level, the impact of globalization on women and gender relations continues to be neglected nationally and internationally. Entities of the United Nations system are taking steps to integrate the goals of macro-economic with those of social development

Globalization effects on gender: labour market

The extension of the market can have both positive and negative effects for women's situation and gender relations.

Positive effects may include increased employment opportunities for women in non-traditional sectors, thus enabling them to earn and control income.

Negative effects can include increased exploitation and dependency on direct engagement with the market, and particularly on the vagaries of the market.

Globalization effects on gender: trade in services

Trade policies affect employment, production, distribution and consumption patterns, cultural values, social relations and the environment, all of which engage and affect women as well as men

Increases in world trade, particularly in the services, has increased the involvement of women in the various occupations and professions of the services sector.

Globalization effects on gender: governance

Globalization is generating an unprecedented understanding that economic and social rights are part of the international human rights discourse

Similarly, the growing force of international women's movement and their influence over the intergovernmental processes are empowering women and creating space for women's organizations at the national and local levels to grow

Globalization effects on gender: poverty

The limits on the State's ability to provide social protection, provisioning of needs and human capital investments has become more strained

This poses a major challenge to poverty eradication programmes and the efforts to respond to the needs of the less visible segments of the population, especially women and children, in responding to their right to basic services and development of their capabilities 20VERIN

Globalization effects on gender: migration

Globalization has created labour demand patterns which inherently favour short-term, temporary employment

As a result, a short-term contracted labour migration appears to be on the rise with distinct gender differentiated consequences

Women, whose labour has low opportunity cost in the market and who are socially considered to be flexible labour, are entering into new labour engagements more so than ever before

Globalization effects on gender: technological change

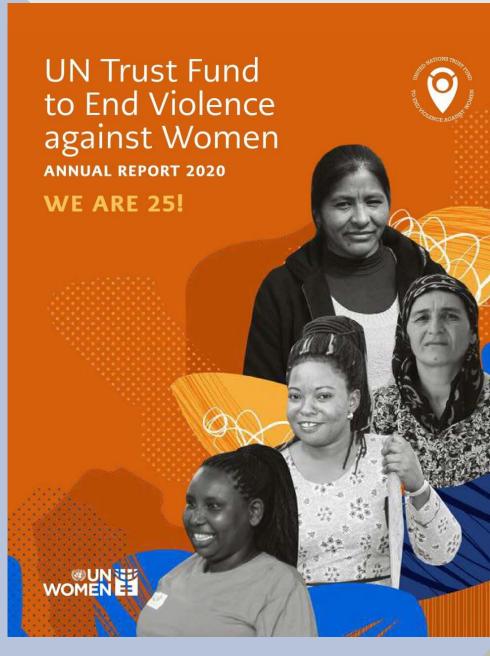

Due to the expanding reach of new communication technologies the use of technology for the empowerment of women has been impressive

For example, many women world-wide are making effective use of Internet and e-mail for development purposes such as networking, advocacy, dissemination and exchange of information, and creative e-commerce initiatives designed to help local artisans and producers market their products globally

Nevertheless, it must be recognized that millions of the world's poorest women and men still do not have access to these facilities

The Women Who Changed The Tech World

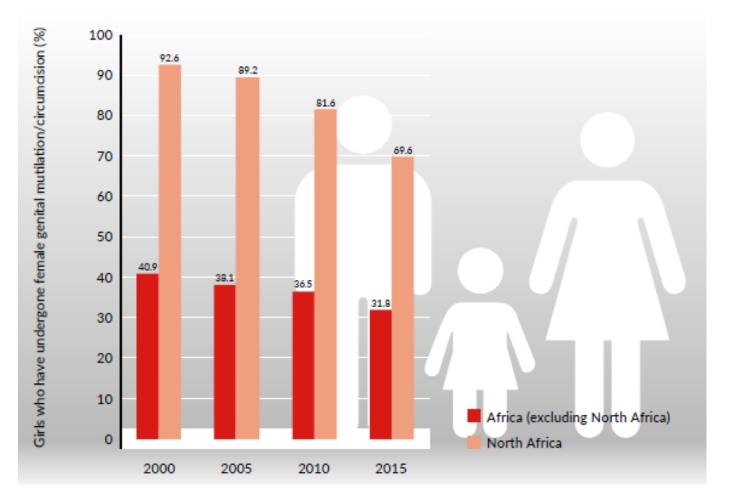

THIRD PART Strategies and processes to counter gender discrimination and violence towards a sustainable development model

Starting form the meaning of gender discrimination and violence

• Gender-based violence = as a multifaceted phenomenon that encompasses physical, sexual, psychological and economic violence. It is manifested in different forms including physical and/or sexual violence by intimate partners or non-partners; femicide; child, early and forced marriage; female genital mutilation (FGM); trafficking; 'honour' crimes; sexual harassment; gender-biased sex selection; and cyber violence

• Gender discrimination = Women and girls disproportionately experience violence, as in most contexts they tend to have less power, fewer resources, lower income and education levels than their male counterparts Proportion of girls aged 15-19 years in Africa who have undergone female genital mutilation 2000-2015

What and how changes the gender discrimination and violence

extreme usability of and increasing global access to the Internet

new types of warfare

rising in the numbers of female militants or contributors to violence

swift development of legal frameworks for identifying, demanding responsibility for, and penalizing gender violence

The cultural approach of analysis

Patriarchal processes understood in this manner are so much part of our global reality that they have mitigated our ability to discern and read this "violence"

Consequently, violence against women is often perceived as normative, and even necessary, in the everyday lives of both men and women in international cultural contexts because women are involved in the perpetration of violence, even against other women

Task n. 4 Exampling patriarchy

Specify in your example

- who acts according to the values of patriarchy

- towards whom the actions of those who act according to patriarchy are directed

- how are the actions of patriarchy judged by others: are they accepted and considered natural, or are they contested?

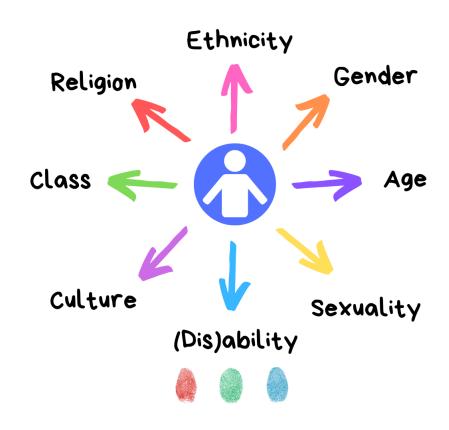

An analytical approach: the intersectionality

Framework for understanding how aspects of a person's social and political identities combine to create different modes of discrimination and privilege

Intersectionality identifies multiple factors of advantage and disadvantage, including gender, sex, ethnicity. These intersecting and overlapping social identities may be both empowering and oppressing (Kimberlé Crenshaw, 1989)

Approach of analysis of how interlocking systems of power affect those who are most marginalized in society, differently from the analytical systems that treat each axis of oppression in isolation

In this framework for instance discrimination against black women could not be explained as a simple combination of misogyny and racism but something more complicated

Strategies and processes to combat gender discrimination and violence (1)

Contemporary feminist groups and women's organizations remain rooted in local issues, on the other hand they also engage in information exchange, mutual support, and a combination of action towards the realization of their goals of equality and empowerment for women on an increasingly supra-national level

Some examples

- Association for Women's Rights in Development (AWID) (http://www.awid.org)
- Women Living Under Muslim Laws (WLUML) (https://web.archive.org/web/20091029172850/htt p://www.wluml.org/)
- Women Learning Partnership for Rights, Development, and Peace (WLP)
- Center for Women's Global Leadership (CWGL)

Strategies and processes to combat gender discrimination and violence (2) Transnational events also played a key role in facilitating interaction and communication among feminist organizations: the World Conferences on Women convened by the United Nations in the last quarter of the twentieth century gave opening spaces for different feminists from over the world

Achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls

Goal 5: Gender equality

Ending all forms of discrimination against women and girls is not only a basic human right, but it also crucial to accelerating sustainable development. It has been proven time and again, that empowering women and girls has a multiplier effect, and helps drive up economic growth and development across the board.

Since 2000, UNDP, together with our UN partners and the rest of the global community, has made gender equality central to our work. We have seen remarkable progress since then. More girls are now in school compared to 15 years ago, and most regions have reached gender parity in primary education. Women now make up to 41 percent of paid workers outside of agriculture, compared to 35 percent in 1990.

The SDGs aim to build on these achievements to ensure that there is an end to discrimination against women and girls everywhere. There are still huge inequalities in the labour market in some regions, with women systematically denied equal access to jobs. Sexual violence and exploitation, the unequal division of unpaid care and domestic work, and discrimination in public office, all remain huge barriers.

Affording women equal rights to economic resources such as land and property are vital targets to realizing this goal. So is ensuring universal access to sexual and reproductive health. Today there are more women in public office than ever before, but encouraging women leaders will help strengthen policies and legislation for greater gender equality

The UN 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development

How to face gender discrimination and violence?

constrains individuals' ability to participate in public life has severe consequences for their health, including mental and reproductive health and HIV

increased health-care needs

lack of legal systems and legislative provisions to criminalize violence against women diminishes human capital formation

second- generation consequences decreases economic production costs associated with long-term emotional effects, even when legislation is in place, implementation lags behind and impunity prevails in many situations discriminatory laws that exacerbate women's vulnerability to violence

justice systems and legal services are not necessarily accessible and responsive gaps in data and statistics obscure the gravity of the problem

Tackling Violence against Women and Gender-Based Violence

Equality Bodies' Contribution

Response measures to tackle gender-based violence

- primary prevention include building women's economic independence; working with both men and women to strengthen equal and respectful relationships; shifting social norms through, for instance, mutually reinforcing group education, training and community mobilization; and parenting programmes. Protection involves ensuring safe spaces and introduction of sanctions through laws, regulations and other legal mechanisms to enforce compliance and punitive measures for perpetrators
- early intervention focuses on individuals and groups with a high risk of perpetration or victimization through, for example, psychoeducational programmes for children who have been exposed to violence
- response measures are aimed at building systemic, organizational and community capacity to respond to violence and strengthen multisectoral support to those who have been affected by violence. These include legislative and procedural reforms to strengthen access to justice for survivors, and workplace policies such as paid leave provisions and co-worker sensitivity trainings
